URGED BY WILSON RAILROADS AGREE TO ARBITRATION

Washington, Aug. 3.—President Wilson's efforts to avert a threatened strike of engineers and trainmen on western railroads were successful today. It was announced at the White House that the railroads had agreed to arbitrate the dispute with their employees.

The mediation board, it was announced, planned to arbitrate only the question of increased wages demanded by the employees.

President Wilson last night wrote a letter to the railroad managers appealing to their patriotism.

The situation has reached a crisis hardly permitting a full consideration of the merits of the controversy and the circumstances are such that I feel I can appeal to your patriotism and regard for the public welfare to make whatever sacrifices are necessary to avert a national disaster.

The president urged the acceptance of the arbitration plan, "even though you may regard it in some respects as unfair to the interests you represent."

Chairman Trenholm of the managers' committee answered as follows today: "Ordinarily the managers insist on a plan of arbitration, recognizing our right to be heard upon claims regularly presented in our behalf."

From the very benches where, but a few days ago, he was bitterly denounced, Redmond was enthusiastically cheered as he sat down.

The king of Belgium has telegraphed a supreme appeal for the safeguarding of his country's integrity. The question overshadowing everything else is Belgium's neutrality and integrity.

Sir Edward Grey having finished his announcement and the Irish leaders been heard from, the commons adjourned until 7 p. m., when Premier Asquith was expected to make a statement.

It was reported that several members of the cabinet who opposed war under any circumstances will resign. The expectation was that the premier would then form a coalition cabinet, in which all political parties will be represented.

Lord Kitchener was prominently mentioned as a candidate for the ministry of war.

The German cruiser Augsburg was bombarding the Russian port of Libau Sunday, but nothing had been heard from there today.

There were rumors that English and German squadrons had met in the North sea and that two English and six German ships had been sunk, but these reports lacked confirmation and were not generally credited.

That England's forces had been mobilized, a step which everyone felt sure was preliminary to a declaration of war, was announced in the house of commons by Foreign Minister Sir Edward Grey.

The British, he said, could not see France subdued and Belgium and Holland ravished—honor, if not self-respect, compelled the nation to go to its ally's aid. He laid special emphasis on "German disregard of Belgium's neutrality."

Amidst thunders of applause it was also announced that the Irish home rule state-act had been passed. It was believed that the British cabinet would resign, deeming war wrong under any circumstances.

The expectation was that Premier Asquith would so reorganize the ministry as to have all political parties represented. Lord Kitchener was deemed a likely candidate for war portfolio.

From Vienna came the news that Russians had invaded Austria at Lemberg. An early report that Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria had been assassinated was generally discredited.

Italy almost simultaneously proclaimed its neutrality and ordered all its military forces mobilized. It was believed that it was understood it did not suit the labor leaders, and a general strike, with excellent prospects of a revolution as its outcome, was looked for here.

Denmark and Sweden were most apprehensive of German landings on their coasts and were looking to their shore defenses.

France and Algeria were declared under martial law. The Russian dowager empress, on her way from London to St. Petersburg, was detained in Berlin and given her choice between returning to London or going to Copenhagen.
